Emails link Peter Thiel's Palantir and Eric Schmidt's daughter to Facebook's Cambridge Analytica fiasco
Jim Edwards Mar. 28, 2018, 5:15 AM

Emails indicate that Eric Schmidt's daughter Sophie once suggested that Cambridge Analytica's parent company work with Palantir.

Cambridge Analytica later developed a relationship with a Palantir staffer that produced the idea to use an app to harvest Facebook user data.

Both Cambridge Analytica and Palantir are owned by conservative billionaires who funded Donald Trump's election campaign.

LONDON — Both Peter Thiel's data-mining company Palantir and a daughter of the former Google chairman Eric Schmidt had connections to Cambridge Analytica's misuse of Facebook user information, according to documents seen by The New York Times

"We learned today that an employee, in 2013-2014, engaged in an entirely personal capacity with people associated with Cambridge Analytica," Palantir told The Times. "We are looking into this and will take the appropriate action."

The employee was Alfredas Chmieliauskas, according to The Times. His LinkedIn shows that he is a business-development staffer at Palantir in London. He suggested that Cambridge Analytica create a personality-quiz app to harvest data from Facebook users, The Times said. Cambridge Analytica eventually used a similar method to obtain data from about 50 million Facebook users it could then sell.

The connection between Palantir and Cambridge Analytica was apparently suggested by Schmidt's daughter Sophie, who had been an intern at SCL Group, a UK-based defense and intelligence contractor that created Cambridge Analytica in 2012. A 2013 email seen by The Times indicated that Sophie Schmidt, who did not respond to the paper's request for comment, urged that SCL work with Palantir:

"Ever come across Palantir. Amusingly Eric Schmidt's daughter was an intern with us and is trying to push us towards them?" one SCL employee wrote to a colleague in the email.

Cambridge Analytica and Palantir began their relationship in 2014, when Christopher Wylie, the pink-haired Cambridge Analytica cofounder turned whistleblower who testified to Parliament in London this week, visited Palantir's London headquarters in Soho Square with Cambridge Analytica CEO Alexander Nix. The Times said :

"Mr. Chmieliauskas continued to communicate with Mr. Wylie's team in 2014, as the Cambridge employees were locked in protracted negotiations with a researcher at Cambridge University, Michal Kosinski, to obtain Facebook data through an app Mr. Kosinski had built. The data was crucial to efficiently scale up Cambridge's psychometrics products so they could be used in elections and for corporate clients.

"'I had left field idea,' Mr. Chmieliauskas wrote in May 2014. 'What about replicating the work of the cambridge prof as a mobile app that connects to facebook?' Reproducing the app, Mr. Chmieliauskas wrote, 'could be a valuable leverage negotiating with the guy.'"

Nix later tried to work officially with executives at Palantir, but they demurred. Ultimately, Cambridge Analytica pursued the app without Palantir's official help.

The emails will make uncomfortable reading for both companies.

Thiel is a Facebook board member and a conservative libertarian with a dystopian view of the future who funded Donald Trump's US presidential campaign. He became a billionaire through a series of tech investments including PayPal and Facebook.

Cambridge Analytica was founded by Robert Mercer, the conservative billionaire hedge fund creator who has also funded Trump and Breitbart News, the right-wing media group that is often accused of publishing misleading stories.

Cambridge Analytica is now the subject of criminal investigations in both the UK and the US over its role in the 2016 US presidential election and the Brexit referendum in the UK. The company has made contradictory statements about its alleged role persuading British people to vote to leave the European Union .

It was exposed that Palantir worked with Cambridge Analytica on the Facebook data it acquired ^[1]

Thiel is on Facebook's board and "Zuckerberg has continually defended Thiel's presence on Facebook's governing body as vital to the company, a balancing presence to stop the site from sliding too far in any one political direction." ^[2] Thiel helped lead a meeting to calm down conservatives that believed they were being "censored" including: Glenn Beck, Tucker Carlson, Dana Perino, and leaders from the Heritage Foundation and the American Enterprise Institute. ^[2]

Cadre is also in Peter Thiel's portfolio. ^[7] Thiel, who was part of the Trump transition team, gained a role following his donation of more than a million dollars to Trump's campaign within days of the Billy Bush tape release. ^[8]

Bannon said of Thiel:

"I cannot overstate his impact on the transition," Bannon began, describing Thiel as a hidden hand in shaping Team Trump. "You will see in the near term that Peter will be taking on new responsibilities, like intelligence." While Trump and his communications squad may rail about Washington's permanent bureaucracy, especially those in national-security positions, Bannon talked about having been in the trenches alongside Thiel as part of an offensive against the so-called Deep State"^[7] Although he doesn't have an official post, Peter Thiel's company Palantir was just awarded a $876 million U.S. Army contract. ^[9]

Y Combinator previously too, which is why Hacker News can't keep anything up about Vlad Thiel for more than 2 minutes. He has basically used the money he lucked into to push his anti-enlightenment techno-elitism as some sort of heterodox thought. Rather than arguing it, which to be fair he does, though not so openly now, he pays for it to be spread by others. He also applied pressure financially and legally to suppress stories. His contempt for free speech is remarkable.

He's such a movie villain that it's almost a cliché.

Thiel was offered an investment deal by the New Zealand government, courtesy of the taxpaying public.

Our shady conservative government at the time offered a deal where the government would put in around $9 million, and Thiel would put in $7 million.

NZVIF's 2016 Annual Report, shows the since-abandoned clause allowed Thiel to take-over the fund for a nominal price if its investments did well, meaning profits would be privatised, while taxpayers were still exposed if it tanked.

Thiel made $30 million off his $7 million investment. The taxpayer barely broke even.

New Zealand only has two daily newspapers. Both of those companies are trying to merge, meaning we would have the same number of broadsheet outlets as North Korea. Journalism isn't our strong suit and more needs to be done to uncover Thiel's shady business dealings here.

New Zealand after all, is a tax haven for foreign investors - many global billionaires have their boltholes here, not that the public would know about it. Thiel was offered citizenship after spending just 12 days in the country.

On a side note, Palantir is trying to sell their shit to the United States IC and failing. They lost a big bid, and then threw temper tantrums, and then sued the government for not picking them. Harmful, since it stalls the adoption of any updates, not just Palantir's. Not exactly a good way to make allies and build partnerships in the industry.

The article I linked is accurate for the first half - it outlines the (decidedly imperfect) system and why Palantir is acting like a bull in a China shop. In the article's second half, though, the author alleges that Trump is going to save us from the swamp -- What? Given Thiel's involvement with the election, this is the definition of swamp.

Peter Thiel is trying to circumvent the system by cronying up to Trump and having him force the issue.

EDIT: oh wait. After years of failing their bids/appeals, guess who won the contract.

The big wealthy business interests that control things and make all the important decisions. ... They don't care about you at all... at all... AT ALL. And nobody seems to notice. Nobody seems to care. That's what the owners count on. The fact that Americans will probably remain willfully ignorant of the big red, white and Think about it - who do you think got the idea of a "deep state" out there and why? You think that came into the public discourse entirely organically?

The people like Cambridge Analytica who personally boasted of influencing 200 elections around the globe, through bribery, blackmail and propaganda - a literal description of what the deep state does.

They got the news out ahead of them being revealed and pointed the finger at the very people who would be investigating them to boot.

Their time table was off.

The Earth's population will increase by another 3 billion people in the next 50 years or so. Most of those people will be in Africa/Asia, and climate change will push them to migrate to Europe/US. You can't keep all of them out, and our current economic models, which rely on growth, will ensure a lot of them will end up coming here - our populations will be aging/old, migrants will be predominantly young.

Most of them are not doctors/engineers - they'll put pressure on the lower end of the market - blue-collar jobs - which by then will already be few and far between in developed countries due to automation.

It's a ticking time bomb. Our current "troubles" are just a small taste of what's to come.

This isn't something you should be downplaying. It's pretty likely, considering all these successful tech leaders (with enormous power over the distribution of information) have been invited to the same meetings to discuss "things."

Sure, they may not call their plans a "new world order" (although this phrase has actually been used by powerful people), but it's painfully obvious to anyone with common sense to realize that rich and powerful people think they should reign over those below them. This is one of the biggest constants of our history as human beings. Every time someone or some group gets too much power, they feel the need to rule. You can't argue this, it happens literally every single time. Why is today any different?

Like global warming, there will be people who don't believe it, but will make fun of those who do. Actively trying to discredit it as "something only crazy people believe," you might be doing serious harm unintentionally. I don't fully believe in the Illuminati (or whatever an elite group wanting to control the world might call themselves), but I do think we should keep our guard up instead of apathetically letting questionable things happen all around us. It's better to be proactive than reactive.

And for the record, I use my phone to comment sometimes. And I don't use my spellcheckers, because only pedantic cretins use something like a typo to discredit someone's message.

There are too many people who discredit warning signs (out of either ignorance or apathy) for me to think you are any different. If I see evidence that you are going far beyond what those people do, then I might believe you're being paid. But until then, I just think you're one of those who've jumped on the "every conspiracy is false" bandwagon.

I actually don't believe in many conspiracies, but this one is highly probable considering our past. It's human nature to want to control others, and it has happened more often than it has not happened. History is your friend.
