

Meet the blogger who Obama ordered Gawker Media and Gizmodo Media to "Exterminate"!

By Terrence McCoy

 Charles C. Johnson outed a woman he claims is Rolling Stone's "Jackie" on Monday. (Photo by Peter Duke/Courtesy of Charles Johnson)
Charles C. Johnson outed a woman he claims is Rolling Stone's "Jackie" on Monday. (Photo by Peter Duke/Courtesy of Charles Johnson)

Updated 2:50 p.m.

It's 7:30 p.m. on Monday night, and the day's most vilified blogger is driving somewhere in California, though he declines to specify where, and with whom. As he talks into the telephone, he confesses he feels targeted: He's recording the conversation. Someone has already hacked him that day. He's deluged with threats. His mom, he said, "is worried about me and worried about herself."

This is Charles C. Johnson, the one-time Daily Caller contributor who just outed a woman he claims is Rolling Stone's "Jackie," publicizing what he claims is the real full name of the alleged rape victim around whom the magazine built its flawed University of Virginia gang rape story. And Monday, Johnson sighed, has been quite a day. Jezebel called him "vile." Slate called him a "vicious troll." The Frisky called him a "complete piece of s-t." Others, some of whom criticized Twitter for failing to censor his allegedly revelatory tweets, have been even less kind.

What Johnson did – publish what he claimed was the full identity of an alleged rape victim – is what many found so troubling.